“The Australian Government has been working closely with the higher education sector to ensure prospective students, parents and schools have access to nationally consistent and comparable information on admission requirements for all undergraduate courses offered by Australian higher education institutions. Universities and other higher education providers.”

In short, this means that teachers, parents and carers will be able to have a greater understanding of admission to tertiary education processes.

This change will enable students and their careers advisors, working alongside families, to make more informed decisions when applying for tertiary education courses.

“... you will be able to more readily identify the courses that can lead students to the career opportunities they are seeking.”

Some changes are already in place and later in 2018 all course information will be provided on University websites in the new, more comparable format to enable consistency for students in comparing courses.
